The presidents

Introduction

Presidents have been our leaders for hundreds of years. Helping us follow laws and win wars. When the president has been elected they live and work in the White house, which is located in Washington D.C., the first president to live in the White House was John Adams. First the people running for president, tell the citizens why they should become president, and what they would do. Then the people vote on who they want to become president whoever has the most votes gets a elected. If the president lies or makes a bad law they could get impeached that means there not president any more. If congress wants to make a law they write it down and sent it to the president. The president can agree to the bill or veto it. The president can only serve for two terms. They have to make speeches. The president make judges to answer questions, in the court house.
